Overview

Sydney Brady represents high net worth individuals and families in complex matters involving estates, trusts, and guardianships, including cases where probate and family law intersect. She handles a broad range of fiduciary litigation, including trustee removal actions, will contests, breach of fiduciary duty claims, equitable actions, undue influence matters, and guardianship and conservatorship proceedings. Sydney also regularly advises families navigating guardianship issues involving minors, young adults with disabilities, individuals affected by substance use or mental health concerns, and elders. With a deep understanding of the sensitive family dynamics that often underlie these matters, Sydney offers practical, strategic guidance that balances her clients' legal rights with their personal goals.
