Overview

Damian Privitera advises clients on regulatory and commercial matters involving health care, life sciences, technology and data. He works with life sciences and biotechnology companies, health care providers, technology businesses, nonprofit organizations, and clients in professional services and education. His approach is collaborative and practical: understanding what clients want to accomplish, helping them work through legal and business questions with relevant stakeholders, and finding a workable path forward.

Damian works with clients on research collaborations, sponsored research agreements, material transfer agreements, technology licenses, and related services and confidentiality arrangements. He helps clients establish clear expectations around ownership and use of inventions, research results, software and data; publication rights; and the responsibilities of companies, academic institutions and research service providers.

He also represents technology providers and customers in software-as-a-service, cloud services, software development and outsourcing transactions, including the procurement and use of artificial intelligence tools. His work addresses privacy, cybersecurity and intellectual property considerations, including HIPAA compliance, business associate agreements, data-use and data-sharing arrangements, and the protection of health, research and other personal information.

His health care regulatory practice includes counseling on licensure, reimbursement, fraud and abuse, consumer protection, and marketing and advertising of health care products and services. He also advises on agreements and regulatory considerations supporting telehealth, health information exchange, electronic health records and other health care delivery initiatives.

Across his practice, Damian works closely with business leaders, scientists, clinicians, and IT and security teams. He emphasizes clear communication and advice that helps clients make informed decisions and put their plans into practice.

Damian serves as secretary of the board of directors of Live Out Loud, a nonprofit organization supporting LGBTQ+ youth, and is active in the Day Pitney Alliance, an employee resource group.
