Overview

Heather Brochin is a trusted litigator and strategic advisor representing clients in the financial services, healthcare, professional services, energy, and technology industries. Heather also serves as outside general counsel to several New Jersey nonprofits, guiding leadership teams through complex legal challenges and advising on governance and organizational strategy. Heather represents clients in state and federal courts and before administrative agencies in matters involving employment discrimination, harassment, retaliation, wage and hour claims, restrictive covenants, and employee benefits claims.

Heather partners closely with clients to deliver practical, business-oriented counsel across a broad range of workplace issues, including hiring, terminations, reductions in force, employment discrimination, unlawful harassment, internal investigations, personnel policies, leaves, and wage and hour compliance.

Heather also has substantial experience negotiating and drafting employment and separation agreements for both companies and executives, as well as designing and delivering tailored workplace trainings. Heather regularly advises clients on the strategy, enforceability and drafting of non-competition, non-solicitation, and non-disclosure agreements and litigates related issues.

Heather has frequently been published and spoken on employment law issues and has been cited in several respected business media, including Law360. Heather was formerly the managing partner of the firm's New Jersey office and the Chair of the Employment & Labor Business Unit.
